Moyer Makes Speech

Charles S. Moyer, of the Western Fed-ration of Miners, whose trial with "Hill faywood for the murder of Gov. Stemenberg of Idaho, of which they were acquitted, brought him into the public notice a few years ago, trade his first speech to-day. He favored the report of the adjustment committee, which recommended that the controversy between the recommend union of steam shows men, new affiliated with the International Steam Engineers, and an independent organization which had been branded as seculers, he referred to the executive council for adjustment. Delegate Moyer proposed that it he further ordered that it ellier side refused to accept terms offered by the council that the other he recognized.

Moyer's proposition was defeated by a heavy tote and the committee statabled. Chairman Mitchell, of the adjustment committee, was obliged to take the floor in support of its report subdining the engineers' union from taking in as "approximations," and fremen's helpers, who are not eligible to the fremen's union. The committee's report was insimmously indorsed.

GRAVES OF CONFEDERATES WHO DIED IN NORTH

WHO DIED IN NORTH

The graves of more than 2,000 Confederate soldiers and sallors, who died in the North during and after the Civil War, have been located and marked with monuments appropriately inscribed, according to Gen. James H. Berry, surviving member of a Federal commission appointed for that purpose, in his final report to the Secretary of War.
The locating and marking of the graves of Confederates in Northern States was first suggested by President McKinley, in a speech delivered in the South. In 1906, an appropriation of 1206, 900 was made by Congress for the performance of the work. Gen Berry, who has completed the task, was himself an officer in the Confederate army, and was later United States Senator from Arkaness.
